

Designs of software

Good Design

In my opinion, the weather app for the iPhone is close to perfection. The user interface is nice to look at, it has the most essential information right in your face without having to go through too much work to find it, and you don't find yourself having trouble understanding what each thing represents, being pretty intuitive even for a untrained person in all things concerning mobile phones.

Bad Design

The bad design I will be talking about is Dodi Repacks. This website allows the user to download games. However, when you first look at the main page, the user has no idea what the purpose of the website is:

Another example is the way they display their games, having no sense of correlation between color and the game itself, and being listed in a way that is unappealing to look at.

